Neb. July 29.—For about a week Henry Bruzemann, editor of the Staats Anzeiger, and J. D. Schmitt, editor of the Freie Presse, have been publishing papers of this city indulging in a war of words through the columns of their respective papers. Late last week has been growing bitter, and the Freie Presse came out with a special denouncing Bruzemann, and that he was hopelessly insolvent, and that his paper would have to be sold under the hammer. Kretsch cautioned him, and advised him not to advance subscriptions to the paper. Bruzemann became incensed at this, and on a still hunt for his rival, he came out at about 6:30 o'clock, he found him in the saloon on the corner of 14th and N streets, and without any warning he rushed at him, and whip, striking him over the shoulders. Bystanders intervened and prevented any further action. The whip used was a cat-o'-nine-tails. Knoch immediately complained before Judge Persons, and an arrest warrant for Brugnagum was issued for Brugnagum, who was afterwards arrested and taken to police headquarters. He gave bail for his appearance next morning.

Prince and His Name.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Krong Luang, the Varoprajan, a prince of Siam, who is in New York, on Saturday, on his way to the queen's jubilee. The last of his princely name have not yet been in Queensdown, but may be looked for.

The next fortnight. He is a brother of the late king of Siam, and is one of the nobles who followed Victoria's carriages through the streets of London. By virtue of his position he is nominally the Siamese minister of foreign affairs, and diplomats at Washington had the pleasure of reading statements from him, in which bore his signature. He comes to England in the fleet Umbria, which has large capacity and is able to carry more than 1,000 passengers. The crown prince is the sixth son of the late king, and is the youngest of the sons who has thus far come to this country. He has two brothers, who were born to him before he came to England, and the hairy family. The Siamese king will probably not arouse as much interest as the crown prince.
